Various public and philanthropic agencies in the district have approached the problem from numerous angles. The Chelsea Neighborhood Association through its health committee, has devoted considerable time and energy to constructive and preventive health measures. This committee of the Neighborhood Association, Dr. E. H. Lewinski-Corwin, Chairman, in the early part of April, 1917, approached the Metropolitan Life Insurance Company with the suggestion that the Company, through its agents in Chelsea, make a health census of the neighborhood, similar to those previously conducted in Rochester, Boston and in other places, so as to establish the basis for a constructive health programme in the future. The Company agreed to undertake the work with the cooperation of the Neighborhood Association, the census to be taken during the two weeks following April 23d. Local Conditions. Before entering into the details of the census and its findings, it may be well briefly to touch upon general conditions in the Chelsea neighborhood as related to public health. Chelsea contains about 180,000 residents. The district presents all the problems of a good-sized city. It contains some desirable residential areas, separated from a considerably larger number of congested poorer sections; its thoroughfares are devoted to offices, small shops and to some of the largest manufacturing plants in the country.
