These two facts together suggest that the disruption of brain protein synthesis by high phenylalanine levels in infants may account for the mental retardation observed later in these children. Much work remains to be done to confirm this possibility. However, it is clear from the review and research described by Waisman that neurochemistry has the tools that will lead to an understanding of - and therefore perhaps control of - these inborn errors of metabolism which otherwise can lead to lifetimes of personal tragedy for the affected persons and their families. The final section of these Proceedings deals with neurochemical processes which occur during brief behavioral experiences, particularly learning. The reported research has been motivated by the search for processes which underlie the encoding of memory, although the identification of these processes is not yet certain in the various studies. Geller and Jarvik begin with a discussion of short term and long term memory storage processes, and describe the induction of retrograde amnesia by various agents as evidence for these processes.
